

Dear US Senate,

I am a United States citizen, born and raised in Minnesota, currently living and working abroad. The United States is unique in the world in imposing income tax on citizens who neither work nor live in the country of their nationality. This is a heavy burden of paperwork and an unjust financial hardship. It limits my opportunities abroad by making it more difficult to bank and invest. It also makes it complicated to save for retirement. Please, do away with citizenship-based taxation.

Sincerely,

Michael Paul Ehrlichman
