The following interview questions.

Duration 3-5 minutes to question + unexpected and a bit of "experiments" Brownells in Russia.

1. Is NRA apolitical organization, or perhaps it could be called a third political force (the Republicans / Democrats) with its goals and objectives? How to find a common language with the power when changing the ruling party?
2. How is the work of the NRA with various small federations and associations in the United States?
3. Do you have NRA partners in other countries with similar goals and objectives?
4. What is the position regarding the difference NRA gun laws in different states.
5. Modern Russian weapons in the US - low cost or functionality? What brands or models can be distinguished?
6. In what niche in the US market is Russian arms - the country / brands.
7. How do you assess the prospects of the Russian embargo on cartridges similar sanctions for concern "Kalashnikov"?
8. I think that the ban on deliveries of Russian hunting weapons and ammunition from the USA- is a long time and it does not matter for US manufacturers because of the small volumes. It is so or not?
9. How quickly the US market using old weapons of war - what the life cycle of the most popular models?
10. The official point of view of the NRA in the tragic cases of crime with guns with lots of victims? Does the actual severity of the problem, depending on the position of the president of the United States?

. In short - the results of this trip. Assessing the potential of "gun rights".

I am sorry if the language is not perfect.

And do not forget: each word will be checked by you and David Keene before the interview will be published.
